Why STEEL GRADE and GAUGE are Important:

The Steel Making Process: All Steel is not Equal

The basic process of making steel requires mixing the raw materials of iron ore, coke, and limestone together in a blast furnace. The materials are superheated and melt together. A bonding process of the various materials occurs during the molten liquid stage. The impurities and waste by-products called slag are separated and removed. The liquid material that remains is the basis of steel when cooled. Further processing options determine the type, grade, and gauge of the finished steel or steel alloy product.

Steel Grade Determination: Grade = Durability

Manufacturers do not all use the same type of alloy steel to make parts in our industry. The steel grade is indicative of performance. The higher the grade, the better performance and durability. Some of the factors that affect the performance of steel, and the parts manufactured from it are: hardness, grain size, alloy composition, and heat treating. Key Parts are made from one of the highest grades of steel in order to manufacture parts that will last and be more resistant to corrosion and rust. Key Parts uses steel that is less hard in order to form the parts more precisely, but also a dense steel that is far less porous and more corrosion/rust resistant.

Steel Gauge Factor: Gauge = Strength

The number of ounces per square foot of area or the weight of the steel defines gauge. "The lower the gauge number, the thicker the steel". This base definition applies to bare steel before any galvanizing, paint or other type of coating. Manufacturers that use sheet steel typically order the material to the minimum gauge acceptable to the customer and specify that "nominal" tolerances be used. Nominal means that the customer could order the minimum 24 gauge material thickness (.0219") with a standard plus or minus .003 inches tolerance for that gauge. The result is that even though the customer ordered a metal thickness within the 24-gauge range, the material received and subsequently processed and sold is in the 25-gauge range. In this case, the customer is truly selling a product that is 24 gauge in name only.

Key Parts orders material with "tight" tolerances to assure that the specified gauge be acquired and used for the parts we produce. The steel is also ordered with a thicker gauge to further maintain control since the theoretical thickness cannot be maintained 100% precisely in the steel forming process. Key Parts uses OEM or better gauges of steel which far exceeds the minimum gauge acceptable to the customer. The gauge of steel is important for strength. The thicker the gauge, the more resistant it is to pings, dents, bending, and stress.

With Key Parts, customers can be sure that they receive a product that meets the strength and durability standards they are looking for in the parts that they buy.

WHEN TO USE UNIVERSAL REPAIR PARTS

DOMESTIC / IMPORT TRUCKS, VANS, SUV'S, & CARS

You should use these steel Universal Parts for areas that do not require an entire new part replacement and for minor areas of rust. They can work well for small areas to patch such as those shown above. Flex Edge is efficient with curved areas. J-Lips are particularly useful for a partial door area repair. Make sure that the areas to be repaired do not have significant rust around them that can migrate over to a newly repaired area. Check behind and underneath the area that you need to repair. If you can see or feel additional spreading of rust, then you should consider replacing the entire area with the full high-quality KeyPart designed specifically for that repair job.

COWL INDLUCTION HOODS

Key Parts hoods add style to any truck!

PHOTO A) This shows a plain grey 2006 CHEVY Colorado Crew Cab with the OEM hood that came standard with the vehicle at the time of purchase.

PHOTO B) Shown here is the same vehicle with a Key Parts RAM AIR Style hood added to the vehicle and replacing the OEM hood. As you can see, the fit is clean and well matched to the truck.

NOTE: The Key Parts hood has not yet been painted to match the truck color.
